FIFTH BIRTHDAY

HAZLET — Joseph Young, son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Young of 18 Barrier Drive, celebrated his fifth birthday at a party in Howard Johnson's, Keyport, and a family barbecue.

Dear Ann Landers: I am only 21 years old and have been married five years. My husband, who is 27, is carrying on with our babysitter. She is 16. I became suspicious when it took him an hour and a half to drive her home. She lives six blocks from here.

I found motel room receipts in his pockets (how dumb can you get?) and a bill for perfume came to the house. He said he bought it for his mother. His mother doesn't even know what perfume is. We had a long talk a month ago and he swore he had stopped seeing the girl and I thought it was settled. I should have known better. He is such a liar I can't get a straight sentence out of him. Divorce is out of the question. Our religion allows one marriage, lousy or not.

The girl is considered a minor in this state. Can I do anything through the courts to break them up? — Only His Wife

Dear Only: You could have your husband put in jail, but what good would that do? My advice is to get some counseling and decide if you want to share bed and board with the bum. The Church doesn't insist that you live with a man who acts rotten. Interesting that this girl is exactly the age you were when you married him. If you'd like to write another letter for 16-year-olds who think they are mature enough to get married, be my guest.

Dear Ann Landers: Four years ago we moved to Albuquerque. We have a lovely adobe house with a spacious back yard and the air is fresh and invigorating. My parents, who live in a small apartment in the heart of Newark, have been driving out every August to spend a week with us. Be-

KEEP FACECLOTH HANDY

Keep a facecloth handy for children when they come in from playing. Summer brings grimy hands which may touch walls or furniture. Whenever little ones come in for a drink or a trip to the bathroom, wipe their hands and face with the cloth wrung from soap suds and cool water. They will feel more refreshed for it and you can relax knowing your walls are out of danger.

Babysitter Affair

fore they pull up they always stop at a market, load the car with steaks, chops, fruits, vegetables and canned goods. They also insist on taking us to dinner at a fine restaurant the night before they leave. One could hardly call them free-loaders.

My husband, Karl, starts knocking them mid-July. After they leave I have to listen to his small digs for another two weeks. Neither Mom nor Dad has an ounce of malice in them. They are lovely, big-hearted people. I can't understand why Karl dislikes them.

His folks are a couple of sour apples. At our wedding his father and mother shook hands with me. I have never seen them kiss anyone. (I often wondered how they happened to produce Karl). We have invited them to visit us a dozen times but they are too cheap to make the trip.

Karl is beginning to complain about my folks because they are due here in a few weeks. What shall I say to him? — Mae

Dear Mae: Save your pipes and enjoy that lovely New Mexico air. Nothing you say will make any difference.

That poor fish was probably hatched in a tank of icewater and doesn't know what it is to have a warm family relationship. He resents yours, which is why he keeps chipping away at it. Tune him out, honey.

flowers — how they reproduce themselves and what makes them grow. He has been told that all living things come from seeds. Billy has seen pregnant women and he knows that babies' lives begin with a seed from the daddy and until they are ready to be born they will be carried in the mommy's tummy.

Recently he pinned me down and I had to tell him exactly how a new baby gets out of the mommy's tummy. He seemed perfectly satisfied and the subject hasn't come up since.

Last night I casually mentioned to my husband that Billy has an unusually good understanding of the life processes. When I told him about our recent conversation he became madder than I've ever seen him. He called me an idiot for going into so much detail. According to my husband, there is no need to describe human reproduction until a child is 12 years old. He says there is so much sex talk around these days that kids think about nothing else. He believes parents should stay with the seed story as long as possible. He claims so much information encourages "experimentation and investigation." We have two younger children and I need to know if he is right. Thanks, Ann. — S.O.S.

Dear S.O.S.: He is wrong. A child's questions should always be answered honestly. If your husband thinks he can stick with the seed story until a youngster is 12, I have a jolt for him.

All children "experiment and investigate," and when they start to school they invariably trade information. It's far healthier for a child to get the facts at home, from a parent, BEFORE he goes to school and picks up bits and pieces from the kiddie underground.

Dear Ann Landers: Our daughter is going with a young man who appears to be too good to be true. He is handsome, immaculately groomed, has perfect manners, a charming sense of humor, is thoughtful and kind and has a promising future with a fine firm. Marie told me several months ago that he wants to marry her but she can't make up her mind. (They are both 24.) I told her she'd have to be crazy to pass up such a gem.

Last night Marie came home with a swollen lip. She tried to conceal it but she couldn't make it to her room in time. Then she told me that the "gem" had hit her—and it wasn't the first time. This is why she is reluctant to marry him. My question: How serious is this fault? Can he change? — Cleveland W.

Dear Q: It's plenty serious. If he changes it will probably be for the worse. A man who gives a girl a swollen lip during courtship will probably fracture her skull after marriage.

Confidential to Grown-Up Girl who Wants to Learn from Experience: This is one experience you can live without. I am dead set against any mind-altering drug. Your friend has been very fortunate. I hope she doesn't push her luck. Flash-backs can occur as late as several months after the dosage.

You Can't Take A Vacation From Dental Health

Proper dental hygiene is a 365 day job. By adopting a few new habits you can help eliminate plaque and cavities. We all know about decay, but what about plaque? This is a combination of bacteria and food which collects on teeth along the gum line. If not removed it will destroy the bony support around your teeth and healthy teeth may be loosened and lost.

Brushing helps remove plaque but cannot reach crevices between teeth. Disclosure tablets, dissolved in the mouth show where plaque has been missed in brushing. Dental floss can then be used to remove that which has been left.

YOU OR YOUR DOCTOR CAN PHONE US when you need a delivery. We will deliver promptly without extra charge. A great many people rely on us for their health needs. We welcome requests for delivery service and charge accounts.
